***///

Sheila Nourse, Deb Potter, & Leesa Streifler

January 23 – March 29, 2025

Closing Event: Friday March 28, 5 – 7 PM

Recognizing that our culture often undervalues old women's lives and bodies, /// confronts stereotypes and creates space to appreciate aging through the works of Regina artists Leesa Streifler, Deborah Potter, and Sheila Nourse.

Ceramic figurines commonly depict sentimental and idealized subjects; Potter's small-scale figural clay sculptures are equally whimsical and tragic. A middle-aged woman is elevated on a pedestal that is actually a garbage can, highlighting how society discards older women. Potter also illustrates elderly women's heart-breaking loss of agency, who are swallowed up by oversized armchairs, tucked into bed with baby dolls, and futilely grasping at balloon strings in her work.

Streifler's drawings of aged bodies are as gorgeous, funny and enjoyable as they are dreadful. The artist applies lavish strokes of oil stick and fluorescent paint, enticing us to gaze at the wonder of sagging breasts and bellies, broken capillaries, spidery wrinkles, and bulging fat rolls in her drawings. Her work helps us to confront fears underlying our reluctance to identify with older women—fears of being forgotten, useless, or grotesque.

Nourse's Golden Salon Series encompasses fifteen portraits of women over fifty, assembled from domestic items and discarded objects. Rather than representing her subject's appearance, Nourse's portraits demonstrate the value of lives lived and identities forged through the accumulation of items.

Rooted in the "I" of the artists' individual experiences, /// encourages viewers to empathize with and appreciate the complexities of aging and female identity. While each of us has unique experiences with aging, it is a universal experience that affects us all.

Ten Years Dreaming

Cindy Baker

June 5 – August 2, 2025

Opening Reception: Friday June 6, 5 – 7 PM

Performance: TBA

When Cindy Baker creates objects first glimpsed in dreams, she reveals the disquieting connection between dreams, memory, and trauma. She animates these objects using sound, electronics and performance with her body, creating an emotional space for audiences to engage with their lived, dreamed and remembered experiences. The use of her dream journal entries highlights the fragility of memories and how they can be intertwined with physical and emotional pain, making her art both intimate and relatable.

In Dream Come True, Baker reflects on how revisiting past dreams can evoke strong emotional responses, prompting her to examine the impact of the forgotten and repressed on 05 her personality and interactions. She situates dream objects—ranging from embroidered handkerchiefs or a sink overflowing with ropes of jewels to an enormous inflatable duck-shaped chair—in an audio installation that uses generative sound to immerse listeners in a continuous and evolving tapestry of voices, representing the complexity of memory and the subconscious.

Baker explores the connections between trauma, memory, and the body using an adult-sized Big Wheel tricycle in Things I've Forgotten. During an endurance performance, she rides the tricycle while a broadcast recording of over 300 dreams plays. Although the project is rooted in her memory of being abducted as a child, the act of pushing her body to its limits serves as an exorcism, allowing both the artist and the audience to explore personal and collective experiences related to trauma. The use of oversized toys is both disarmingly playful and a visual representation of powerlessness. Baker's openness fosters empathy and understanding for those whose bodies, desires, dreams, and experiences deviate from social norms.
